01 / EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Understand the market. Choose a focused segment.

A corporate venue must suit the event's purpose and participant format. Room capacity alone does not establish whether a meeting or event will work.

01 What you can offer

Offer companies the meeting, training or launch formats your venue can accommodate.

02 Where to start

Choose an event type that suits your space.

03 What to ask

Discuss attendance, room layout and technical requirements.

Purpose
Understand the context and choose a relevant customer group.

Your next step

Choose one customer group from this brief. Write down what you could offer and what you need to learn in the first conversation.

02 / MARKET INDICATORS

What the numbers tell us.

Exhibitions support a range of supplier work around participating brands. Choose the work you pursue by event type, date and your delivery capabilities.

What these figures cover

Direct spending, GDP contribution and total impact are different measures and must not be added. Attendance may include repeat visits and is not a unique-person count.

Consider international customers

Inbound corporate meetings are an international client route; the event is still delivered at the local venue.

03 / CHARTS AND MARKET REACH

Compare the figures. Choose where to start.

The chart brings the published figures together. Below it are two ways to turn this context into a more focused customer search.

01 / FIRST CUSTOMER GROUP

Start with a specific job

Choose an event type that suits your space. Research companies and agencies running it, then ask about dates and capacity.

02 / INTERNATIONAL CUSTOMERS

Consider international customers

Inbound corporate meetings are an international client route; the event is still delivered at the local venue.

Direct spending, GDP contribution and total impact are different measures and must not be added. Attendance may include repeat visits and is not a unique-person count.

04 / POTENTIAL CUSTOMER SEGMENTS

Find a buyer group you can serve well.

These four groups offer different starting points. Choose one that fits your experience, then use the suggested discussion topic to learn about the company's needs.

05 / SECTOR OPPORTUNITIES

Turn the context into a useful conversation.

Use one of these approaches to begin a focused discussion. Learn what the customer needs before deciding whether to prepare a proposal.

01

Choose your starting point

Choose an event type that suits your space. Research companies and agencies running it, then ask about dates and capacity.

Next step

Research a small group of relevant firms.

02

Define the work together

Discuss attendance, room layout and technical requirements. Explain which catering, equipment and other services are included in the price.

Next step

Write down the agreed requirements.

03

Look across borders

Inbound corporate meetings are an international client route; the event is still delivered at the local venue.

Next step

Check how you would deliver the work.

ANIVO / PRACTICAL WORKFLOW

From research to the first conversation.

1. Define the search. Describe your service, target customer and market in Anivo.
2. Review the plan. Check the proposed research approach before starting.
3. Assess the firms. Review company information and save suitable firms to the CRM with your notes.
4. Prepare your introduction. Review the email draft before sending. Track replies and the next step in the company record.

Make the message relevant

In your introduction, explain why you are contacting this company and which part of its work you can support. Ask one clear question that can start a useful conversation.

06 / SOURCES AND NOTES

Read the original sources.

Use these links to read the original publications. The date beside each indicator is its measurement period, which may be earlier than this report.

How we prepared this brief

We selected published indicators to explain the market context. Customer groups and suggested approaches are Anivo's practical interpretation of that context.

When using the figures

Keep the stated dates and geography when sharing a figure. Wider-sector data do not measure every specialist service. Source updates may change the published values.

Choose one group. Begin one conversation.

Use the customer profiles to select a manageable starting point. Learn about the company's needs, then decide whether your service is a fit.
